

Presented by the Center for Feminist Research, the Canada Research Chair in The Political Economy of Gender & Work, the SocioLegal Studies Program, and the Faculty of Graduate Studies at York University; and the Women and Gender Studies Institute, the Adult Education and Community Development Program and the Caribbean Studies Program at the University of Toronto

CARLA FREEMAN

Graduate Seminar at York University

Friday October 26th, 2012

11:00 am - 1:00 pm

YRT 626

"Freeman helps us understand how new forms of labor power are being tapped in old places. This is a penetrating demonstration of the genuine relevance of anthropology to the modern world. It also shows us in what ways change and persistence are subtly interwoven, in a world that is not quite so new as others tell us."—Sidney Mintz, Johns Hopkins University

Carla Freeman is Winship Distinguished Research Professor of Anthropology and Women's Studies, PhD Temple University 1993, and is associated faculty in Latin American and Caribbean Studies at Emory. Her general areas of research are: culture and political economy of globalization and development, feminist anthropology, transnational migration, the Caribbean region.

An article will be circulated prior to the seminar

Please RSVP to cfr@yorku.ca by Monday, October 22, 2012